The DAT remains negative between attacks. The antibody is detected by the Donath-Landsteiner test, in which patient's fresh serum is first incubated with RBCs at 4 °C (39.2 °F) to allow binding of antibody. The mixture is then warmed to 37 °C (98.6 °F) to allow complement activation, resulting in intense hemolysis. Antibody titers are ...

A high variety of team interventions aims to improve team performance outcomes. In 2008, we conducted a systematic review to provide an overview of the scientific studies focused on these interventions. However, over the past decade, the literature on team interventions has rapidly evolved. An updated overview is therefore required, and it will focus on all possible team interventions without ...
